Youth Overdose Prevention: Emerging Evidence for Clinical and Community Practice

La conférence sera présentée en anglais

Résumé:

Drug use and associated risks have changed dramatically in the last decade for adolescents and young adults (hereafter youth) in Canada and the US. The ubiquitous presence of highly potent synthetic opioids such as fentanyl in the general drug supply and in counterfeit pills have significantly increased the risk for drug overdose in these settings. New, innovative research being conducted across acute, primary, and community settings is focused on developing evidence-based and youth and family-centered strategies to reduce drug-related harms.

This panel will share emerging research on the development of evidence-based strategies to reduce drug-related harms for youth, including (1) current Canadian epidemiology of youth substance use and overdose, and ongoing surveillance efforts to inform policy and practice and (2) the co-design of youth overdose prevention interventions for use across acute, primary, and community care settings in Canada and the US.
